Conference Mixes Art and Technology in Cleveland

Notacon (pronounced "not a con"), is coming again to Cleveland in its sixth year. The conference is running from April 17th to April 19th, at the Wyndam hotel at Playhouse Square in downtown Cleveland. This year will feature a free preview starting at 7:00pm Thursday, April 16th.

Notacon is a conference that focuses on technology, creativity, and community, a mix that is often overlooked by large technology conferences. It serves to showcase innovative and creative people and projects, bringing together participants that are interested in technology and the arts and ranging from high school students to senior citizens.

While attracting people from many states and foreign countries, Notacon also has presenters with internet notoriety, such as Drew Curtis of FARK.com fame. Notacon features North America's only currently running demoparty, Blockparty.

The speaker list, schedule, registration and accommodation information and more can be found at www.notacon.org. Recordings of past presentations are available free of charge at www.notaconmedia.com. Information about Blockparty is located at www.demoparty.us.

Notacon is run by FTS Conventures, a company started by three Clevelanders. Two of the founders are Case graduates. Residing in Lakewood, they are proud to be bringing business and tourism to Cleveland despite the current economy.
